December 2012

The UT Health Chapter of the Student National Medical Association (SNMA) is proud to host the second annual Pre-med Conference for Underrepresented groups in medicine, "Harnessing Your Potential: A Guide to Achieving a Career in Medicine" on February 2, 2013. This year’s inspiration is the lotus, which has been used in many cultures to symbolize progression to a higher level.

SNMA is an organization that strives to improve cultural competency and social awareness, while working to address the needs of the underserved. One of our primary missions is to recruit and support underrepresented students in medical schools through various programs. This conference provides the opportunity for pre-medical college students to meet and discuss important issues with various UT Health faculty and students while allowing them to be exposed to the UTHealth medical school campus and the Texas Medical Center.

We have prepared a day filled with great workshops and faculty lectures which will further enhance a student’s interest and understanding of the medical field. Enclosed you will find additional conference and registration information.

Respectfully,
